

Norman A. Assad M.D., F.R.C.S.(C)

"I take a conservative approach to all areas of my gynecological care. This holds true to my fertility services as well. Before deciding on a procedure, I carefully look at a wide range of options, each designed to help people's dreams become reality. Seeing the joy on the faces of women and their partners after learning they've become pregnant is the reason I became a fertility specialist in the first place."

An Education That Goes Beyond a College Degree

"My education taught me the medical side of women's health care. But there's another side of fertility care that can't be taught, and that's the human side. The side that deals with the emotions and feelings associated with my patients' health problems. In the 30 years that I've been in practice, I'd like to think that listening to my patients and understanding their needs and concerns is my real specialty."

Offering Progressive Care as an Active Leader in the Medical Community

"Professional organizations help me stay on top of the latest developments in fertility, obstetrics, and gynecology, so I can offer you the highest level of care. I also learn about the latest methods my colleagues are using to make women's health care a more comfortable experience. So you'll benefit from the knowledge of many doctors, not just one."
